Environmentalists take Fox cleanup fight to U.S. Senate

By SEAN CAMPBELL
FISHKILL, N.Y. — After House adoption of a measure that critics say could stall cleanup on the Fox River and other sites nationwide, attention here turns to the Senate. A U.S. House appropriations bill adopted last week included language directing the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency not to order sediment cleanup until results from a national study of cleanup techniques is incorporated into its policies. The EPA and environmentalists oppose the measure, arguing that "order sediment reduction results from the Senate and appropriate contradictory language," the House action effectively kills the EPA from ordering sediment cleanup until the national study is complete. The EPA worries the House measure could doom sediment cleanup on the Fox River and other sites. An amendment to strike the order on the House floor last week failed by a vote of 216 to 208. Rep. Mark Green, D-Green Bay, said he voted against the amendment because it also included directives relating to the enforcement and privatization of drinking water standards for arsenic and radon. — language Green said would have ended construction with millions of dollars in un-funded mandates. Green verified that completion of a Fox River dredging project targeting PCBs outside Fort James Corp's West Mill would be affected by the House measure. He also confirmed that it wouldn't discourage reaching a voluntary cleanup settlement among government officials and non-paper mills responsible for the area's toxic polychlorinated biphenyls. Green said the House measure is similar to language the House adopted in committee reports in the last two years. But the EPA says the earlier language called for a halt only to EPA-ordered dredging, and only until the National Academies report is completed. "Senators said the EPA relies on report language, saying, 'We like to do our best to know we're all on the same page,'" Green said.

Montgomery to run for second term

By SCOTT HELBERGER
FARM GUTTER, Wisconsin
MADISON — Cutting taxes and improving health care and education would be state Rep. Phil Montgomery's priorities if he is elected to a second term. Montgomery, Ashwaubemon, announced Tuesday that he will run for reelection in state representative District 11. The district includes all of Ashwaubemon and parts of Ashwaubemon, De Pere and Green Bay. Montgomery said he had received a favorable reaction to the proposal to run in his first term in the Assembly. "I have very satisfying when you can go to work and know that you have a legislature that has the best of your neighbors by cutting their taxes, or by fighting for more affordable prescription drugs, improved education and safer streets," he said. Montgomery said he has been successful in getting the Assembly to pass a bill that prevents the state from forcing a state representative to serve more than two terms.
